Pittsburgh Steelers Cornerback Coty Sensabaugh Partners with Food for the Hungry

Nashville, Tenn. - March 23, 2017 - Pittsburgh Steelers Cornerback Coty Sensabaugh has joined hands with international nonprofit Food for the Hungry as a Pro Player Partner. Under the new partnership, Sensabaugh and his wife, Dominique, will introduce and connect fans to Food for the Hungry and share with them its mission to end poverty worldwide, giving their audience a glimpse into the long-term investments the organization is making in communities around the world.

“We’re all God’s children, and we all need help, all over the world. You can’t put it in a box and just say I want help here, we all need help,” said Sensabaugh. “Dominique and I are excited to work with Food for the Hungry because they go into difficult places and deal with real problems. They’re really trying to help people, and not just trying to put a band-aid on it.”

Food for the Hungry provides innovative, community-specific resources to vulnerable people in more than 20 countries, equipping them to invest in their own development and empowering them to thrive.

“Coty and Dominique are special individuals who clearly see the value in serving others in so many ways. We are honored they will be joining Food for the Hungry as advocates for our mission and helping us get others involved as well,” said Milam Byers, Manager of Sports Partnerships with Food for the Hungry.
